

New Bremen Reserve: A Unique Country Estate

Central Texas ♦ Austin County ♦ New Ulm

Four miles from New Ulm, Texas and an easy 60-minute drive from Houston is a truly remarkable country estate development. 489 acres of the most beautiful landscape and lush rolling hills offering magnificent vistas, enchanting forests and inspiring ecological diversity. The sandy loam soil has a genteel softness under foot and is ideal for native wildflowers, grasses and trees. Ravines and ponds complement this natural setting. The developer, Lanham Frazier, resides in the area and has thoughtfully enhanced natural beauty with sophisticated wood rail fencing, gated stone entries, underground electrical, selective brush management and a bold native ecological restoration program. Native American Seed of Junction, Texas (seedsources.com) was utilized by planting 36 species of native wildflowers and 28 species of native grasses. This intense restoration program added diversity and enrichment to the numerous existing varieties of native wildflowers and grasses. Recent environmental surveys indicated, “The wildflowers and songbirds were spectacular. We have surveyed many properties and the variety we catalogued exceeded any we have observed.”
